In an 1892 speech, Ida B. Wells told her audience, “The way to right wrongs is to turn the light of truth upon them.” She lived these words, determinedly and vocally confronting every social inequity she encountered.

The Light of the Truth Exchange challenged students to engage artistically with the following questions: In what ways can your artwork can shed light on truths? How can artists illuminate their surroundings, through leadership, activisms, community building, or sharing perspectives?

In the past year, the challenges of the pandemic, forced much of the country to look inward and deeply analyze underrepresented voices. Light can also symbolize warmth, comfort, clarity, and hope. What tools and mediums do we utilize to dismantle, build, and highlight the world today?

The coordinators of this project brought together students and faculty mentors from three distinguished institutions to engage in creative exchange. Student participants responded artistically to the exhibition theme Light of the Truth. In addition to the group exhibition, students gained valuable professional experience visiting each of the three institutions and presenting their artwork to the campuses and the general public.
